

Number these events so that they are in the correct order.

The narrator blames the 'vulture eye' as motivation for his actions.
He lifted the latch and put his head in the room every night for seven nights.
The old man awakes and senses someone in the room with him.
The narrator is convinced he can hear the old man's heart beating.
The narrator claims his disease has made him more alert and astute.
The old man is suffocated to death and chopped up before being hidden under the floorboards.
At 4am there is a knock on the door.
He went in to the room on the eighth night. He becomes angry when he sees the eye.
The police sit above the body and we think he is going to get away with the murder.
We are told that the old man had never wronged the narrator.
The narrator confesses the truth suddenly.	